

Contributors

Linda Dégh is Distinguished Professor at the Folklore Institute, Indiana University. She has written numerous important articles focusing on legend, and in many ways her work has shaped the course of legend study. Currently, Professor Dégh is working on a book-length examination of legends that promises to be a significant contribution to the field. In addition, she has done important work in folktale scholarship and ethnic studies.

Bill Ellis holds a Ph.D. in English with a concentration in Folklore from Ohio State University. Currently, he is an Associate Professor of English and American Studies at Pennsylvania State University, Hazleton. He has published numerous articles on legend, and since 1988 he has served as editor of FOAFtale News, the newsletter of the International Society of Contemporary Legend Research.

Richard M. Gottlieb, M.D. is a psychiatrist and psychoanalyst practicing in Manhattan and Sharon, Connecticut. He is on the teaching faculties of the New York Psychoanalytic Institute, the Psychoanalytic Institute of the New York University School of Medicine, and the Department of Psychiatry of the Albert Einstein College of Medicine.

Jennifer Livesay is a Ph.D. candidate in Folklore at the Folklore Institute, Indiana University. Her master's work examined the role of poets and poetry in Icelandic sagas. Currently, she is writing her dissertation on the women-church movement and Catholic women's home liturgy groups.

Jean-Bruno Renard is an Assistant Professor of Sociology at the University Paul Valéry in Montpellier, France. He has published several books and articles on folk belief and urban legends.

Jeannie B. Thomas is an Assistant Professor of English at Indiana State University, where she teaches folklore. She has published articles on Native American issues and the depiction of gender in legends. Presently, she is completing a manuscript dealing with laughter in the oral narratives of women.